

Beaujolais Mal Coiffé Deux

“Making American grapes again.”

The first bottling of Beaujolais Mal Coiffé was so great, just so great, we sold millions of bottles of it, millions. It was great, really great. A really great wine.

So we're doing a second bottling — it's even better. Much better.

It's really, really good. And Trump Vintners, the company that makes this wine, has been put into a trust with very poor eyesight so I have no connections with it, hardly any, and it's an American company and I've given it no incentives or tax breaks, practically none, to keep its corporate offices here in America.

GOVERNMENT WARNING: You won't be able to drink enough of this wine, ever, to forget about the past election.

Beaujolais Mall Coiffé Deux is made from grapes grown in China (I made them build and pay for that wall) and picked by Chinese laborers — no Mexicans! Beaujolais Mall Coiffé Deux is bottled in China in bottles made in China. This label was printed with Chinese ink on paper made in China.
